“ Paul was one of the first people I met at Charlie Battery. He was a role model for my career. He was kind and patient as he instructed younger officers and soldiers. One time, when I was in the Battalion Tactical Operation Center, Brigadier General Dennis J. Reimer (later Chief of Staff of the Army) was asking soldiers how long they had been in and how long they had been in their current position. He was shocked at people being 9 years in the same job. I didn't have the heart to tell him that the guy standing behind him had been the Battalion Fire Direction Office during the Korean War, because I didn't want to see a general officer cry and I knew Paul didn't want the attention. It was my pleasure to know him and serve with him.
