The words I have are inadequate for the sorrow I know you feel right now, but my prayer for you is that God grants you the strength and grace to face the coming days and know that Sarah will live on in the hearts of those that love her. I love you, Christy.

I haven't seen you Cristy since we were in the Restoration House together but just know that I am very sorry for your loss and you are in my prayers and I will continue praying for you during the coming days, weeks and months. I can't even begin to imagine your pain but lean on God for understanding and let Him take your pain and know that your baby girl is no longer suffering and dancing in heaven with the angels. The pain we suffer in this life is trumped only by the love we share with each other . The pain we leave in this world but the love We take it with us to the next .

“ My sweet girl, i can only pray and believe that someday soon we will be together again. You are the beautiful reason i had for continuing to stay strong and never giving up on life. Now that you wont be beside me encouraging and believing in me that i could accomplish my goals i feel so lost and alone. I will never get over this loss, but i will promise to continue to do my best. I will be praying for strength and comfort continuously. You were my reason for living, my only daughter, and my best friend in the entire world. Fly high with the angels my love, always and forever, and to the moon and back.

“ Sarah, when you were a little girl, we lived just up the road from you. You would come to our house all the time and I would give you milk and cookies and you and my son Jesse would hang out a bit. I always thought you were the cutest little thing. You were always so happy and bubbly and full of energy. Your smile was infectious. I wish you could have beaten your demons and stayed here with those who love you, but, the demons were too overpowering for you. I am so sorry . May you now soar in the heavens and be free of those demons. We love you Sarah and you will be missed.
